- 1 Read the passage given below carefully and answer the questions that follow, using your own words as far as possible : 10

The Right to Education Act is a landmark legislation created by well-meaning people. It has five features but its great weakness is the total neglect of outcomes. More than half of our children in class V cannot read or do simple arithmetic that is expected of them in Class II. The focus of the law makers, presumably, was to get all children into school. Oddly enough, more than 95% of primary school age children are already in school. The crux of the problem is high dropout rates and this relates to high teacher absence. The Rs. 43,500 crore required by this new law will mostly finance government teacher salaries that are now seven times India's per capita income against the global norm of two. High teacher salaries are good in principle but only if they are accompanied by performance.

To want to close down institutions that generally serve the needs of the poor seems bizarre, ridiculous, and immoral to say the least. Their critics dismiss these schools as being of very poor quality and claim that the poor are being 'duped' by unscrupulous elements'. But what about the poorer quality of government schools?

No democracy can allow tens of thousands of schools to close down. The new law will merely raise the amount of bribe paid to inspectors. This, in turn, will force schools to hike fees, and the burden will fall on the poor parents. Imagine the law that makes people dishonest and harms the poor! Our democracy is a work in progress, and the answer is not to close schools but understand their situation and suitably amend the law. Considering these schools charge such low fees, let us have a graded system of recognition, as we have first and second class tickets in railway trains. Allow these schools the freedom to pay market salaries to teachers and have smaller playgrounds to ensure that their fees remain affordable for the poor. Don't treat them like illegal brothels but see them as heroic examples of people solving their own problems. Make them safe from rapacious inspectors. They are symbols of India's unique economic model of a nation rising despite the state.
